

If you're interested in a combined baccalaureate-MD program, consult your school counselor to ensure you're enrolled in a curriculum that incorporates the courses required for admission to the program and prepares you for the premedical phase of this pathway. The requirements may involve specific high school or college courses. If you're a college freshman or sophomore interested in these programs, speak with your school's prehealth advisor or with the admissions office at the medical school; acceptance processes vary by school. For additional information about specific programs, contact each program directly. Admission to these programs is extremely competitive, and other relevant extracurricular activities are generally required, so be sure to ask your counselor or contact the program about such requirements.

This chapter contains a list of combined baccalaureate-MD programs by state and by number of years to complete them. For further information about the programs, refer to the MSAR website. Chapter 4 contains information about diversity initiatives in medicine, and Chapter 7 provides details about the holistic review of candidates who apply to medical school.

How to Find and Prepare for Baccalaureate-MD Programs

Baccalaureate-MD programs can be a great option for high school seniors considering a career in medicine. If you're a high school student, talk with your school counselor about programs that may be good options for you. You can use the MSAR website to search for medical schools with baccalaureate-MD programs. Also, explore opportunities at your school or in your community to get engaged in health care settings and shadow health care professionals. These experiences will help you understand how you fit within a career in medicine and perhaps even identify the type of medical setting that suits your interests, aptitudes, goals, and personality.

Each year, the list of programs changes. New programs are added, while others may be paused or discontinued entirely. You can use the worksheet at the end of this chapter to evaluate the mission statements of the programs you are interested in and decide which ones may be a good fit for you.
